AMICALE

Exhibition “Life intersection” at European Patent Office in Berlin February - May 2019

In life we love to receive surprises from our loved ones on special occasions, we enjoy those special moments and wish the same to everyone; but life in general offers different surprises good or bad. I consider life to be like a “sine curve”, a mixture of ups (good times) and downs (difficult or bad times).

Without this mixture, life will never be as beautiful as it is, it would be boring. What matters is trying to understand, what I consider to be a bad surprise can turned to be the best present one has ever received. Personally I take every challenge in life as an opportunity to appreciate little things we take for granted in our daily life. I get strength believing that everything happen for a reason and tomorrow is a better day.

We are all born with nothing, growing up we go through the “sine curve” and how we overcome all challenges in our way differs from one person to the other. Whether it is manmade or natural calamities let’s say a war, we all naturally react the same way, no matter the skin colour, origin, culture orientation, language we speak... With this in mind, we as human being have something in common which I call human intersection.

My Art work takes you through the journey of my personal experience, what I went through taught me a lot about life; there is no formula of life. By the grace of God, I am thankful of where I am, and the challenges of life, specially my life as asylum seeker, made me stronger and wiser.

The message I would like to give all refugees worldwide and everyone who is facing challenges in life is that, life is a mixture of sunshine and rain, tearful moments and laughter, pleasure and pain no matter the skin colour, the origin, culture, language ... therefore as human being this is something we have in common. Always remember, there was never a cloud the sun could not shine through, and as long as one still alive everything is possible. You are not alone, be strong, utilise your potentials and capabilities and all opportunities hidden in what you consider as negative to create a positive future to benefit the society you live in and the world at large.
